Call for Papers: Journal of Disaster Studies

Announcing the Journal of Disaster Studies, an open access, peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary journal published by the University of Pennsylvania Press, which publishes the work of disaster researchers around the world. We are excited to welcome submissions for publication in the first issues, which will appear in 2023.

The aim of the journal is to advance interpretive theory, methods, and empirical research that supports disaster prevention and response. Specifically, we seek articles that examine how disasters are anticipated, experienced, governed, and understood, conceptualizing "disaster" expansively to guide analysis of a wide array of hazards, risks, and disruptions. We foreground historically and theoretically framed analyses of both slow and abrupt disaster and seek to define and foster disaster justice as a key concern and theme. In addition to research articles, we welcome topical/thematic essays, interviews with practitioners, artwork, and book reviews. Abstracts are published in multiple languages. Abstracts are published in multiple languages. Articles in languages other than English are strongly encouraged; if you are interested in submitting in another language, please contact one the editors.

Journal of Disaster Studies is multimedia, linking traditionally published journal articles to a digital platform. To advance open data in disaster research, authors are encouraged to share source and supplemental data. The digital platform will also provide a place for experimenting with new forms of scholarly communication, for informal translations of articles, for interviews with authors, and for continued dialogue about the journals' articles and collections.

The journal is published twice a year, with submissions from researchers across disciplines, working in academia, government agencies, community organizations, and other arenas of practice.

We are eager to be in dialogue with authors! Please contact us with your ideas for articles and any questions you may have. You can reach us at journaldisasterstudies@gmail.com or by contacting one of the members of our Editorial Collective: https://jds.pennpress.org/about/masthead/

For additional information and discussion about Journal Disaster Studies, please visit our website: https://jds.pennpress.org/home/

Submit your articles here: https://jds.scholasticahq.com/for-authors